

DIVINE MADNESS

Archetypes of Romantic Love

JOHN R. HAULE

DIVINE MADNESS

Archetypes of Romantic Love

JOHN R. HAULE

Fisher King Press
www.fisherkingpress.com
info@fisherkingpress.com
+1-831-238-7799

Divine Madness: Archetypes of Romantic Love

Copyright © 2010 John R. Haule

ISBN 978-1-9267150-4-9

Revised Edition

Previously Published by Shambhala Publications, Inc. under the following titles:

Divine Madness: Archetypes of Romantic Love,
1990, Hardcover 1st Edition.

Pilgrimage of the Heart: The Path of Romantic Love, 1992, Trade Paperback.

All rights reserved. No part of this book may be reproduced in any form or by any means, electronic or mechanical, including photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system without permission in writing from the publisher.

Published simultaneously in Canada and the United States of America. For information on obtaining permission for use of material from this work, please submit a written request to:

permissions@fisherkingpress.com

For Mary, Kathy, Dani, and above all Susan,
in love and gratitude.

CONTENTS

Acknowledgements	ix
1. Romantic Love and the Love of God	1
2. The Naked Sword: Opportunity for Love's Transformation	22
3. The Love Potion: Metaphors of Depth	38
4. Love's Wound: Locus of Agony and Rapture	57
5. The Demon Lover: Obsession's Heart	76
6. The Unholy Marriage: Obsession's Soul	95
7. Seduction and Fidelity: Intimacy's Chambers	115
8. Love Play: Enabling Transcendence	136
9. The Lovers' Quarrel: Fight for Renewal	155
10. Worthy Opponents: Love's Refinement	174
11. Love's Angel: The Creative Third	190
12. Love's Quest: Following the Relationship	208
13. Love's Labor: Ordinary Time	223
14. The Fall of Camelot: Love's Phoenix	241
Bibliography	255
Credits	267
Index	271

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

For the first publication of this book two decades ago, I thanked friends, teachers, students, analysts and analysands as well as the dozen or so people who read drafts of chapters in early stages of the work and who offered support, criticism, and suggestions for further reading. I thank them again here, and I thank again Katherine Reeder and Bobbi Coogan for doing the laborious work of gathering permissions to quote material published by other authors. I regret to say I neglected to mention one of the most important contributions, the one that stands out for me today, on rereading the manuscript. My son Lukas was between the ages of six and twelve while I was working on this book; and together we sought out, read and discussed much of the material cited here—especially the stories of King Arthur and his Knights of the Round Table. We also watched taped versions of the operas cited, and read fairy tales from all over the world.

1

Romantic Love and the Love of God

If puppy love is foolishness, a mature romantic love is full-blown madness. The lover has strayed from the highways and mainstreams of our placid and well-planned common life to build a solitary hut somewhere in a wilderness of disgraceful and deranged notions. There is no convincing the love-mad of their errors and delusions; they would rather disabuse us of ours. Whether love is an insanity grandiosely claiming to be wise, or a sublime wisdom masquerading as folly, seems not to admit of calm debate. We do not persuade one another about love. We find ourselves already lined up on opposite sides: one throng facing east, eyes sharp and clear; the other facing west, eyes hooded with scales.

Although, aside from periods of famine, it is hard to imagine a time when eros did not occupy a prominent position in human culture and society, romantic love as we know it today is an outgrowth of the courtly ideal, which sprang up suddenly as a dominant theme in twelfth-century Europe. Denis de Rougemont's classic book, Love in the Western World, traces its beginnings to one William IX, Count of Poitier and Duke of Aquitaine, who can be called the first troubadour. He wrote ribald songs boasting about his sexual prowess and kept a notorious woman, known as La Dangereuse, in a tower of his castle. When two of his repudiated wives formed a convent to liberate women from the servitude of sex, William retaliated by forming an anticonvent of courtesans whom he praised in songs resembling monastic hymns.

This theatrical gesture turned out to be less silly than it may sound. William of Poitier and Aquitaine was a complicated man: petty, cynical, self-indulgent, insensitive and mean to his wives, but still high-minded and very much in earnest in other ways. His versifying and irreverent mockery was more than a passing whimsey for him; rather it drew him into a compelling and transformative lifelong project. His songs gradually began to shift from the lewd to the spiritual. Very likely the religious form of the monastic hymns he was satirizing exerted an influence on the imagery and ideas of his songs. For, although they retained their erotic quality, a different order of longing began to find expression in them.

In particular, William started exploring an image he referred to as "The Unknown Lady." From the day he first dreamed of her while out riding, his compositions began to voice a deeper aspiration underlying his promiscuity. The Unknown Lady assumed greater and greater importance as William came to know her better. She grew into a kind of erotic, mystical queen whom he served with his whole heart and soul. He did not know what difficulties and tasks she had in store for him, but he was burning to undergo them, so great was her worth. Obedience to her coincided with perfect fidelity to himself. "Through her alone," he sang, "shall I be saved."

The fact that within a few years hundreds of troubadours were wandering about Europe indicates that the work of this satirical libertine had far more than personal implications. The songs expressed an important unconscious yearning in European culture as a whole. De Rougemont argues that there were two roots of this movement, both religious: one came out of a dualistic understanding of Christianity and the other from Islamic mysticism.

The Christian movement was Catharism, a dualistic philosophy that held that God had created only the spiritual world, the good portion of reality, whereas Satan had created the material world intrinsically evil. The human condition, therefore, is characterized by the incarnation of a sublime spirit, and the primary task of human existence is to free that spirit from its imprisonment in an evil body. The Cathars quite logically condoned suicide and forbade sexual intercourse, which they saw as a demonic device to imprison free souls in bodies. They considered marriage an "organized vice" and favored celibacy as the best way to deal with human sexuality. Still they tolerated casual sex, especially sodomy, for these practices, while avoiding the imprisonment of souls, relieved instinctual pressures for the great majority of individuals who did not qualify to be counted among the elect.

Catharism, therefore, requires a spiritualized love that denies or, at its weakest, tolerates the body. It finds expression in the fundamental principle of courtly love, whereby the knight dedicates all his efforts to the service of a lady he may have no hope ever of marrying. He is inspired by an erotic spirituality to do great deeds that advance both his kingdom and his own honor. Such a spiritual love exists outside of convention and free from the procreative instinct. In its most characteristic form, as we see in the stories of Tristan and Isolde or Lancelot and Guinevere, the most virtuous and powerful knight of the kingdom is the queen's lover. Because they cannot be married, their love is forced into an essentially spiritual form, or else it is illicit.

Unlawful as this love may be, however, the stories agree that God surely tolerates and may even actively favor the union. For example, in the story of Tristan and Isolde, the lovers are brought together again and again by fortuitous (God-directed) natural events, such as the currents of the sea and the birds of the air. They are saved from death and punishment by gusts of wind; and Isolde at one point passes a "divine judgment" by lifting a red-hot iron bar without burning her hands. When Tristan is bringing Isolde back home to be wed to his king, they inadvertently drink a love potion, and after this no power can dissolve their union. In one of the five earliest versions of the tale, Beroul's Romance of Tristan, they are confronted by the Hermit Ogrin who tells them they are living in sin. They protest that it cannot be sin, as they have drunk a potion that puts it beyond the power of their wills to separate. The Hermit accepts the argument and takes them under his roof.

The second cultural current that contributes to the tradition of romantic love in the West is Sufism, the mystical tradition in Islam. Although Islamic mysticism embraces a multitude of divergent doctrines, practices, and attitudes, the vast majority of Sufis hold that love is the only genuine way of coming to know God. Islam itself has even been called a "love-mad" religion (Schimmel, 1982: 11-13). In the Sufi view, "Everything in the world is in some mysterious way connected with Love and expresses either the longing of the lover or sings of the beauty and glory of the eternal Beloved who hides His face behind a thousand forms" (ibid., 77f.). Love between men and women is part of divine love, for the human experience both conceals and reveals the ultimate Lover and the ultimate Beloved. Indeed the love of God is really the only love there is. Divine love is the depth, meaning, and esoteric secret residing in profane love. The eleventh-century Sufi Ibn al-Arabi writes:

It is God who in each loved one manifests himself to the gaze of each lover . . . for it is impossible to adore a being without imagining the divinity present in that being. . . . Thus it goes for love: a creature really loves no one but his Creator. (Corbin, 111)

The romantic love that results from Cathar and Sufi currents, therefore, is a powerful expression of the human spirit. It is an ennobling bond between two human souls who are separated by physical, moral, and social constraints—typically in opposition to the rules of matrimony and liberated from the procreative instinct. Its sublime goal is a mature and individuated love of God. Just as God is one, so are we one with God and with one another when we love.

Those on the way are almost invisible to those who are not. A man or a woman recognizes God and starts out. The others say he, or she, is losing faith.

(Rumi, 1986: 44)

We are, indeed, talking about a matter of faith—but not the kind of faith that can be written down as a set of propositions. Rather it is the faith that is rooted in our life experience. The Greeks called it gnosis: either you have had the experience, and know the truth about the invisible, or you have not. What is more, “gnostics,” the mystic cognoscenti, love their madness and believe it has peeled the scales from their eyes. Their opponents say that love has blinded them. This book sides with the madmen and explores their madness sympathetically: its rapture, its pain, its wisdom, its power to lead us astray, and its fiery pillar that leads us through the night of our ignorance toward a promised land that is glorious in ways we have not dreamed—but is generally not at all the way we had always imagined it would be.

Perhaps the most articulate mad lover of all time was Jelaluddin Rumi, a thirteenth-century Muslim from Iran who fled the Mongols to Turkey, where he succeeded his father as an expert theologian and had a sizable following of orthodox believers. He scandalized them all, however, when one day a weirdly dressed mystic, or “Sufi,” appeared on the edge of his audience. This man, Shamsuddin of Tabriz, fascinated Rumi, who closeted himself with the newcomer to learn a more emotional and flamboyant way of loving God. He came out of seclusion dancing, and introduced musical instruments (forbidden to orthodox Islam) and the whirling dance of the dervishes to his skeptical followers. They killed Shams in hopes of getting back their beloved teacher; but divine madness, once experienced, cannot be renounced. Rumi became Islam’s greatest poet and most famous lover of God. He says,

Let the lover be disgraceful, crazy, absent minded. Someone sober will worry about events going badly.
Let the lover be.

(1986: 7)

Leave the lover alone because he or she is onto something the rest of us have missed. We find a sense of wholeness in love that reveals the poverty of life without it. Plato expressed these sentiments in his Symposium: he has Aristophanes relate a legend whereby we humans were originally round hermaphrodites, spheres with four arms, four legs, and two genders, each. In this time before time, we were whole and satisfied. But later we were separated into male and female halves, each going about restlessly in search of its mate—each of us haunted by an inchoate memory of the wholeness toward which our entire being tends. When we fall in love, we slip into feelings of oneness and completeness; our aching comes to rest. And when we lose our beloved, we plunge into an emptiness and insufficiency like nothing we have ever known before. From the outside, it looks like the most pitiful derangement, to suffer so at being no more than human. But the lover seems to have found a deeper truth. There is wisdom in that suffering—and a sublime kind of joy.

When I am with you, we stay up all night.
When you're not here, I can't go to sleep.

Praise God for these two insomnias!
And the difference between them.

(Ibid., 1984: Quatrain 36)

In the one case our beloved is so near us, and our enjoyment so important, intense, and soul-satisfying, that we cannot bear the vague parting that sleep brings. In the other case we actually love the insomnia and pain we experience during a night alone, for this binds us to our beloved in a new and no less significant way. Our beloved is present, also, in his or her absence. Even this pain is a blessing because it reveals another dimension of our union. We even find we need the separation in order to appreciate, by its contrast with the bliss of togetherness, the shaft of light that binds our minds and hearts and spirits. If we have ever fallen in love, we have known the agonizing bliss of union of which Rumi sings.

Rumi and most of the other love-mad poets of Islam refer again and again to the legends of the human lovers Layla and Majnun to describe their own love affair with God. These legends were part of Middle Eastern folklore long before the coming of Islam in the seventh century. Although the stories are filled with a great number of incidents, there is no beginning, middle, or end of a single narrative. Majnun, whose name means “madman,” and Layla, whose name means “night,” are a pair of lovers who—like the Sufi and God—almost never see one another. She lives under the constant guard of her tribesmen, who would be dishonored if they were to let her wed such a tramp as Majnun. Meanwhile, he lives alone in the wilderness with only wild animals for companions. Love fills them both and makes them sensitive to the messages they hear in birdsongs and to the sounds of one another’s sighs carried for miles on the desert breezes. Gradually they discover that they have become more a single unified being than mere bodily togetherness could ever have effected. Because they have become one in soul and substance, they find that they no longer need to see one another face to face. The Persian poet, Nizami, collected most of the lovers’ legends into a single poem, which mainly follows the life of Majnun and observes how love transforms everything he is and does. He becomes, in fact, a kind of hermit troubadour:

Love was glowing in [Majnun]. When it burst into flames it also took hold of his tongue, the words streaming unbidden from his lips, verses strung together like pearls in a necklace. Carelessly he cast them away. . . . Was he not rich? Was he not free? Had he not severed the rope which keeps men tied together? (Nizami, 1966: 126)

Their oneness transforms them, painfully but gloriously; it also separates them from their fellow humans and makes them outcasts: “Once I was Layla . . . now I am madder . . . than a thousand Majnuns” (ibid., 145).

According to the Sufi, this state is just as true of God-intoxication as it is of human love. It is a madness to be desired, because the Majnuns of the world are tuned in to a deeper reality than are the ordinary run of people. The true lover knows a different love and a different universe. Nizami’s poem says of Layla:

Love, if not true, is but a plaything of the senses, fading like youth.
Time perishes, not true love. All may be imagination and delusion, but not love. The charcoal brazier on which it burns is eternity itself, without beginning or end. (Ibid., 35)

The Christian mystics, too, are aware of this divine madness that comes over them. It is a mad wisdom that is scorned by the uninitiated but reveals the Beloved in everything the lover encounters. An Italian Franciscan of the thirteenth century, Jacopone da Todi, filled a large volume with poems of praise to his divine Beloved. He treats madness like this:

I know well, O highest Wisdom
That if I am mad, it is Your doing—
This dates from the day I surrendered myself to Love,
Laid aside my old self and put on You
And was drawn—I know not how—to new life.
(262)

This book—as a series of psychological meditations on the nature of romantic love and human relationship—takes the apparently religious perspective that the love of God lies at the root of human love; apparently religious, because it is not at all an arbitrary doctrine that we can elect to follow, as one might change churches after a dispute with a pastor. What religion calls the love of God expresses the foundational and central activity of the human psyche, and human love is real and satisfying only insofar as it expresses this root matter. Because the human psyche has the structure that it has, human love is but a species of divine love. The mystics recognize this in seeing the love of God as the meaning of human love. And, having arrived at this insight, they have traditionally seized upon romantic love as a model to explain the love of God to their followers.

Whether our beloved is human or divine, there is no escaping love's madness or its pain. Unity belongs to the soul, but we are bodily beings, and body brings about separation, distance, and pain. Tristan, in Richard Wagner's version, curses the love potion that brought him all his pain. In this psychological reading of the legend, Tristan knows that the poisonous potion had always been stored in his own heart and not in some bottle on a shelf.

The terrible drink,
which made me familiar, with direst anguish,

I myself, myself,
 did brew!
 . . .
 Oh, terrible draught that I brewed,
 that poured into me,
 bliss I ever enjoyed sipping-- be accursed!
 Accursed be he who brewed you!
 (Act 3)

The mystic knows this pain very well and has learned that there is no remedy for it, other than the pain itself (Wilson and Pourjavady, 81). The pain even has a certain pleasure in it. The Sufi poet Nasimi puts it this way:

Old Man Love:
 "Come in, come in:
 don't loiter around outside!"
 Inside: SPLENDOR,
 cups of pain.
 (Ibid., 74)

The sixteenth-century Spanish mystic John of the Cross says that the pain increases as the soul draws nearer to God, because nearness leads to a progressively "greater experience within yourself of the void of God" (Canticle, 13.1). God's presence, we would have to say, is simultaneously God's distance. The only solution, both for John of the Cross and for Tristan, is death: "Why, since You wounded this heart until it has become sorely wounded, did You not heal it by wholly slaying it with love?" (ibid., 9.3). Rumi says:

First there's dying,
 then Union, like gnats inside the wind.
 (1987: 51)

In the literature of romantic and courtly love, there are only two ways by which the lovers can overcome the painful distance that is proof of love's absoluteness and purity. The first is madness, a complete leaving of one's senses and of the world of consensual reality. Only a madman like Majnun could believe he has become Layla. Wagner's Isolde, singing her final words beside the dead body of Tristan, has a vision of him smiling and the two of them together. Oscar Wilde's Salome achieves union with John the Baptist, when she is handed his head on a silver platter:

Ah! I have kissed thy mouth, Jokanaan. I have kissed thy mouth. There was a bitter taste on thy lips. Was it the taste of blood? But perchance it is the taste of love. They say that love hath a bitter taste. But what of that? What of that? I have kissed thy mouth, Jokanaan. (120)

The other way to overcome the painful distance of romantic love is death. In the Tristan legend, rose bushes grow from the separate graves of the lovers and entwine as a single plant, seeming physical proof that love continues—unabated and unhindered—beyond the grave. Romeo and Juliet lie in the same grave, and Nizami predicts that “One tent will hold [Layla and Majnun] in the world above” (199). Death is the only logical fulfillment in romantic love, for soul can directly cleave to soul only in a world where separate bodies have been completely transcended. Madness and death both do away with the hindrances of body, social convention, consciousness, and even individuality.

In psychological language, whether we speak of madness or death, the goal of love appears to be nothing less than a loss of ego and fusion with the beloved. This is dangerous territory, indeed: for are not most psychopathologies characterized by a weakening and loss of ego function? Loss of boundaries between self and others has in today's argot become nearly the hallmark of serious psychological dysfunction. Similarly, Freud spoke of the illusion of religious striving, and Jungians speak of projecting animus and anima, as false images, onto our beloved so that we see only our own fanciful image of what we want our beloved to be. In all cases, there seems to be something “sick” about the love that is so highly esteemed in the literatures of romantic love and of mysticism.

In Sufism there is a concept that allows us to see this loss of ego in a favorable light. The Arabic fana is a verb that means to disappear, vanish or perish, pass away. It refers to “the passing away of the individual self in Universal Being” (Nicholson, 1921: 17). “The transient, evanescent side of a man must pass away in order that something or someone lasting may reign supreme in him" (Rice, 76). Fana is a state of ecstatic contemplation of divine beauty (Nicholson, 1963: 18). Rumi describes it often; for example, from the fifth book of his great poem, the Mathnawi:

One morning a beloved said to her lover to test him, "Oh so-and-so, I wonder, do you love me more, or yourself? Tell the truth, oh man of sorrows!"

He replied, "I have been so annihilated within thee that I am full of thee from head to foot.

Nothing is left of my own existence but the name. In my existence, oh sweet one, there is naught but thee.

I have been annihilated like vinegar in an ocean of honey."
(Chittick, 180)

Christian mystics, too, have had experiences, which they describe in similar language to that of the Sufis speaking of fana. They had the experience, but not the concept. For example, John of the Cross says:

This spiritual marriage . . . is a total transformation in the Beloved in which each surrenders the entire possession of self to the other with a certain consummation of the union of love. The soul thereby becomes divine, becomes God through participation, insofar as it is possible in this life (Canticle, 22.3).

Also the German mystic, Meister Eckhart, whose life bridged the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries, was familiar with the experience:

But if I am to perceive God so, without a medium, then I must just become him, and he must become me. I say more: God must just become me, and I must just become God, so completely one that this "he" and this "I" become and are one "is," and in that isness, eternally perform one work (208).

These words indicate that the mystics were very close to the experience of William of Poitiers and Aquitaine, when he said that obedience to his Unknown Lady coincided with perfect fidelity to himself.

The passing away of fana is always joined with the continuation in a higher, more real existence, which is called baqa. The Iranian psychologist and mystic Reza Arasteh describes this pair of concepts in almost Jungian language: "Fana is the loss of ego and baqa is gain of self" (x). He distinguishes between ego and Self as Jung does. Ego is the conscious agent, while Self is the greater and eternal personality, the potential for wholeness residing within the unconscious of the human individual.

The distinction between ego and Self requires a little more attention, for self is a term that is used quite loosely, both in ordinary conversation and by psychologists. In the first place, we often talk of “myself “ in order to indicate only the ego. Thus, what do I think of myself? Do I have confidence in myself? These questions point to my conscious self-image, though they may imply the existence of deeper, unconscious realities. The term self is used in another sense by Heinz Kohut and the so-called Self Psychologists to refer to a deep structure that forms the foundation of ego. They speak of the kind of support and “mirroring” that an infant needs from its parents in order to develop a “coherent self structure.” In this sense, self is something built up over the course of an infancy or a lifetime and is very closely associated with consciousness and with the individual differences that obtain among people. The Kohutian self may therefore be located between the loose, everyday meaning of self and the more restricted Jungian Self.

Self will be capitalized in this book when it refers specifically to the Jungian meaning of the term; but even this has at least two senses. In its most proper sense, Self refers to an ontological structure of the psyche, that is, something that belongs to the fundamental makeup of the human soul. It is the archetype of order by which opposing principles are harmonized and balanced. When our life becomes too much one-sided, it is the Self that presents us with compensating images and symptoms to encourage or even to force us to bring ourselves back into balance. This is the Self an sich (in itself), which we do not experience directly, but only in its effects. In its other sense, Self is this principle of order as we experience it. It is our sense of having a “greater personality” that is far larger and wiser than the ego. We do not possess or control this greater personality, but find ourselves contained by it. It is not so abstract as the Self an sich but expresses itself in each individual’s unique way of seeing and experiencing. It is potentially the lived Self.

While we all have a Self in this Jungian sense, many people are unaware of it. We may live entirely in our ego unless we undergo the experience of fana and thereby find ourselves centered and made whole. It is a revolutionary and transformative experience that is both humbling (as regards the ego) and expansive (as regards the discovery of Self). It parallels the encounter with God, in which we are overwhelmed with our creaturehood (humbled ego) and find ourselves enlightened by an intuitive grasp of the greater context of things (gain of Self). In the human interpersonal experience of romantic love, the same kind of passing away (fana) leads to wholeness and centering.

In the passing away from ego and into Self of fana, Sufis recognize a progressive series of steps that have an important application to romantic love. They claim that the mystic can pass away into God by passing through another human being. There is typically a three stage process. The individual Sufi passes away into his own spiritual guide. But the guide's authority proceeds from the fact that he has already passed away into the Prophet Muhammad. Muhammad, for his part, expressed by his very being the ultimate fana, the passing away into Allah. Schimmel writes:

The perfect sheikh is he who has become annihilated in the Prophet Muhammad. United with the haqiqah muhammadiyah (the Muhammadan Truth), he becomes the Perfect Man and thus leads his disciples with a guidance granted directly by God. (1975: 237)

A Christian will perhaps be reminded of the words of Jesus in the Gospel of John (17:21): "That they may all be one: even as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they may also be in us, so that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

Rumi's experience along these lines was rather disreputable. After being seduced by Shams into giving up his position as a respectable theologian to become a dancing, singing poet, mad with the love of God, he also lost Shams through assassination. His followers, who hoped for Rumi's return to "sanity," were disappointed, for in a deeper sense he never lost Shams. He wrote lyric after lyric praising Shams and God in the same breath. In Arabic, the meaning of Shamsuddin is "Sun of the religion"; and that Sun is the Sun of the Universe, or God.

Not alone I keep on singing
 Shamsuddin and Shamsuddin,
 But the nightingale in gardens sings, the partridge in the hills Day of splendor: Shamsuddin, and turning heaven: Shamsuddin!
 Mine of jewels: Shamsuddin, and Shamsuddin is day and night.
 (Schimmel, 1982: 88)

Although he sang of Shams, Rumi continually found replacements for his mentor, human beings through whom he could pass away into God. One of these, an illiterate goldsmith named Salahuddin Zarkub, was particularly repugnant to Rumi's followers. Rumi, however, defended him as the means of fana into God:

He who came in a red frock in years past,
 He came this year in a brown garb.
 The Turk about whom you had heard that time
 Appeared as an Arab this year . . .
 The wine is one, only the bottles are different—
 How beautifully does this wine intoxicate us!
 (Ibid., 91)

If human beings are bottles containing the wine of God, the significance of the "Unknown Lady" in the songs of William of Poitier and Aquitaine becomes clear. She is more than "anima," in the sense of a false image that leads us astray and prevents us from getting to know our beloved. The Unknown Lady contains and manifests the Self for William. The same may be said for Layla and Majnun. The reason their story is such a favorite example for the Sufis is that in passing away into one another, they pass away into God. If they can do it, why not we?

Jung points the way for a psychological understanding of this possibility, saying that when the anima is no longer projected but appreciated as an inner figure within a man, her function is to mediate between ego and Self (1928/35: par. 374). Anima and animus, like Self, are structural components of the psyche. While Self is the archetype of wholeness and balance, anima and animus are the archetypes of relationship. Like Self, they belong to the "collective unconscious," our common human heritage that is as much a "given" of the human condition as two arms and two legs. All of us are born bisexual, in the sense that we all have both male and female characteristics. Owing to the distribution of genes and the influence of our environment, we tend to identify, consciously, with one sex or the other. What is not developed consciously remains in the unconscious. Consequently, a man has a feminine soul (anima means "soul" in Latin) and a woman's unconscious has a masculine quality (animus).

In Jungian psychology there is a good deal of theorizing and some debate over the characteristic differences between animus and anima.

In this book, however, I will be dealing only with those aspects of anima and animus in which they are strictly equivalent to one another and the gender differences are of little importance. The problem created by the gender-specific language of anima and animus corresponds directly to the difficulties English has with the third-person singular pronouns he and she. I have tried to avoid gender-specific language as much as possible, for I believe what I say to be applicable equally to women and men. However, when it cannot be avoided, I shall write as a heterosexual male, calling the lover male and the beloved female. Readers may reverse one or both of the pronouns without damage to the argument.

The simplest way to understand animus and anima is to say that when we fall in love, the man unconsciously projects his anima onto the woman and the woman her animus onto the man. We thereby invest one another with a mysterious and mythological power that is so foreign to our ego that we are sure it is "objective." We wonder how we can have been favored with such good luck as to have fallen for such a goddess, or such bad luck as to be obsessed with a demon. Generally it is a god or goddess we see in one another, so that anima and animus perform the very important service of giving relationship a compelling interest for us.

Anima and animus may, however, be involved in a disservice we can do ourselves, if we fall in love with an illusion. In illusory romantic love, the lover is bewitched by his own projected anima and never comes to know the unique personality of his beloved. The same may, of course, be true of us when we believe ourselves burning with love for God. The soul may, in the words of Augustine, be "constructing an image of unreality and placing its hope and love in a lie" (223). In the extreme case, we can become so possessed by an illusory image of our beloved that we are kept out of engagement with the "real" world. This is portrayed in fairy tales when the young man falls in love with a mermaid or a fairy and allows himself to be drawn into an alien world. Eventually it becomes unsatisfying, and he asks permission to go back home. Sometimes the fairy world has been so fascinating that three or four centuries have passed before a single thought of the world of space and time ever crosses his mind.

In such cases we may say that our anima or animus has led us astray. It has not mediated between ego and Self. It has broken out of its place in the psyche and stands for disarray rather than the harmony of the Self. We become fascinated by something that is peripheral to our real life. If we have fallen in love this way, we have, indeed, “passed away.” We have lost the “reality function” of the ego. But we have not gained the Self. We are alienated from ourselves and unhappy.

It would be nice if there were some kind of formula for discovering the difference between true and illusory fana. The Catholic church is not alone among orthodoxies that have tried to protect against heresy by inventing such formulas—usually with mixed results. In one case the great mystic Teresa of Avila fell afoul of a well-intentioned rule that all visions must be reported to one’s confessor. A rather thickheaded and inexperienced Jesuit told her to “give the fig” to her visions. “The fig” was an obscene gesture that corresponds to what today would be called “the finger.” Genuine mystic that she was, she did not doubt her ability to discern visions sent by Christ from those sent by Satan. Still she could not disobey her confessor. So she sobbed and begged forgiveness when she gave “the fig” to the Christ visions. She claimed the difference between the two kinds of visions lay in the feelings associated with the images. She said the Christ visions were characterized by a “purity” of feeling that would “release her from all other loves” (Lincoln, 61).

This is characteristic of true fana, that it connects us with the Self and that we experience it as integrating, centering, and whole-making. Teresa’s fana connects her with God, the ultimate Center; and the effects of this are a feeling of harmony and monumental significance. All the other loves she might have had are exposed in their insubstantiality and off-centeredness. She has found the touchstone for reality. In contrast, an illusory fana is an incautious submission to something peripheral and less than ultimate. We pass away into irreality.

For all its insubstantiality from the viewpoint of the Self, illusory fana can be awfully compelling. It may take the form of a painful fusion in which each partner seems to lose his soul. Instead of finding our way to a wholeness where we can relax into our greater being, we fall victim to a compulsive and usually aggressive striving for satisfaction in which each of us attempts to possess and control the other. Alban Berg’s opera Lulu richly illustrates this kind of failure of fana. The title character uses her lovers as much as they use her. A portrait of her in the bloom of her youth dominates every scene of the drama. In the last act, Lulu and her pitifully enchained hangers-on have lost all their money in the stock market crash and are living in a London garret on the proceeds from Lulu's prostitution. One of them finds the lost portrait and Alwa, who appears to be the character Berg himself identified with, rhapsodizes over it:

Alwa: (Suddenly with new animation.) . . . With this picture before me, I feel my self-respect is recovered. I understand the fate which compels me. (Somewhat elegiac.) Who stands before those lips with their promise of pleasure, before those eyes as innocent as the eyes of children, before this white and rosy-ripening body, and still feels safe within his bourgeois code of rules, let such a man cast the first stone at us! (Act 3)

The emphasis on image here is no accident, The portrait was painted many years before, when Lulu was just married to her first husband and the future looked rosy. Now, many years, marriages, love affairs, murders, and suicides later, her eros-possessed followers are still in love with the old picture. There has been no growth, either in the characters or in their expectations. They have only led themselves more and more hopelessly into their self-destructive dead-end. Lulu's lovers and admirers try to possess an anima image of her instead of seeing her for who she is. They get stuck in a tortured irreality instead of passing away through Lulu, as the Sufi's fana leads through his master into God. They have come to know neither her nor themselves. They get hung up on the image and have no concern for the truth it symbolizes and reveals. They have fallen in love with the image rather than the woman. In religious language, we would say that this pseudo-fana, which stops at the image rather than proceeding on to the truth it stands for, is idolatry.

When we get hung up on a particular image of our beloved, we do not allow the beloved to become what she must. In order to possess her, we freeze her within a specific image. It is an illustration of determined one-sidedness in an ego that has definitely not passed away. Whether we are whisked away from reality by our fascination with an anima or animus image or try to force our beloved into the mold of our projection, the image we cherish of our beloved operates as a mask to hide her from us.

But anima and animus need not always function as masks that hide the truth. They may act also as lenses that bring the truth into focus: the truth about our Self as well as the truth about our beloved. This, in fact, is the import of the Sufi notion of fana. Animus and anima are the psyche's organs, as it were, that allow us to see with the heart. The knowing of truth we have through fana is affective rather than cognitive. This is the constant theme of the mystics of the major religions. For example, the anonymous Christian author of The Cloud of Unknowing says: "God . . . is always incomprehensible to . . . the knowing power. But to . . . the loving power, he is entirely comprehensible in each one individually" (123). If the human soul is capable of passing away through love of the spiritual master into an affective contemplation of divine Truth, the soul must also be capable of passing through the anima or animus image to the Self of the beloved.

Ibn al-Arabi claims precisely this regarding his relationship with the beautiful Iranian girl Nizam, whom he came to know in Mecca. A reference to her in his writings is, he says, an allusion to "a sublime and divine, essential and sacrosanct Wisdom, which manifested itself visibly to the author of these poems with such sweetness as to provoke in him joy and happiness, emotion and delight" (Corbin, 139). Henry Corbin comments on these words, as follows:

We perceive how a being apprehended directly by the Imagination is transfigured into a symbol thanks to a theophanic light, that is, a light which reveals its dimension of transcendence. From the very first the figure of the young girl was apprehended by the Imagination on a visionary plane in which it was manifested as an "apparitional Figure" (surat mithaliya) of Sophia aeterna. (Ibid.)

This is an experience of anima that is transparent to the Self it mediates. Ibn al-Arabi sees through the lens of his Nizam projection all the way to the ultimate Center. The anima is not acting as a mask here, but as a lens. His affective seeing does not stop short with the image; rather he sees in the anima, or through the anima, a divine vision—Sophia. In Christian language, Sophia refers to the Holy Spirit; for it is always the Old Testament wisdom (sophia) literature that the churches employ to shed light on the nature of the divine indwelling Spirit. Thus Ibn al-Arabi sees God in Nizam. She is the occasion of his fana. He passes through her to the Truth. In the language of Jungian psychology we would say that that divine woman, Sophia, is an image of his anima. And the divinity in that woman is an intimation of the Self that she mediates to him.

Ibn al-Arabi is not afloat in a neurotic, illusory cloud. True, Sophia is just about the grandest form the anima can take; and the Persian girl, Nizam, beautiful and cultured though she may be, needs the eye of an Ibn al-Arabi to become Sophia. The imagination of the heart is surely involved. But on the strength of the consistent wisdom in Ibn al-Arabi's writings, I believe he was seeing Nizam through the lens of his anima. His numinous vision is true because it is anchored in the Self. This is precisely the kind of experience Jung refers to when he speaks of the anima's "higher function." When the anima becomes "depotentiated" of her demonic power, Jung tells us, and no longer controls us as an autonomous complex of the unconscious, she becomes "a psychological function of an intuitive nature, akin to what the primitives mean when they say, 'He has gone into the forest to talk with the spirits'" (1928/35: par. 374).

The demonic power of the anima or animus resides in its bewitching mask. When we can see through that to the psychological realities that it symbolizes, our intuition can "hear the spirits talk." Our ego and our Self are acting in unison, linked by our anima or animus. When we hear the spirits talk and understand what they are saying, we acquire a more profound understanding of what is before us. The spirits belong to the archetypal world of the collective unconscious. They have a broader perspective than that of our conscious ego. Whereas we tend to understand things in the context of other mundane events, they see things against the background of the largest possible reality, the All. The spirits know the All, and they appreciate every object, person, and event in the context of that Wholeness.

God is the name we give to the center, source, depth, and end of the All. Similarly, the love of God is the center, source, depth, and end of romantic love. We can appreciate this in an experiential, transformative, and enlightening manner only when we have learned to use our anima or animus as a lens. As long as they mask our beloved from us, the relationship between romantic love and the love of God remains merely theoretical.

When anima and animus act as a lens, they bring the Self and its designs into focus. This applies in two directions. On the one hand, we become centered ourselves; and on the other, the lens of anima brings the unique individuality of our beloved into focus. Subsequent chapters will develop these themes. Here it is only necessary to appreciate the metaphor of anima as lens and that it brings something wonderful into focus for both partners.

Also something accurate is brought into focus. The lens image suggests eyeglasses, microscopes, and telescopes; I learn to know my beloved down to her minutest detail, and I see deep into the inner space of her world. Because I see her through the intimate lens of anima, I see something that perhaps no one else has been fortunate to behold. I sometimes may see what she has never known about herself; and in my seeing, I reveal it to her—just as she discloses new vistas of my inner space. Our lenses enable us to become explorers of one another's continents and seas; and at the same time we come to know our own.

Anima and animus are not just internal organs in our psyche, somehow stuck inside our skin. They relate us to our beloved. They are the archetypes of relationship. Their function does not end by mediating to us our Self, as a purely internal event. They stand outside us, between us and our beloved. They open us to one another, connect us. They are more than the ocular metaphor of lens can convey, for our feelings sweep further than our eyes can see, into territory of quite another variety.

Furthermore, when our animus or anima has enabled this kind of connection with our beloved, we find that mere physical presence—however desirable—is no longer necessary for us to enjoy the transformative intermingling of our beings. Such a realization lies behind the ideal of courtly love, insofar as the errant knight is inspired by a lady who is comfortably lodged back home and whom he can barely approach even when he returns. Distance causes pain; but as the lover of God knows, distance is another form of presence. On the contrary, if our relationship has been characterized primarily by the projection of anima and animus as masks, we may not have found any satisfaction to ameliorate our distance. A genuine appreciation of our Self-Self connection is necessary if our love is to grow from the separations imposed by physical distance, quarreling, and the like.

Rumi, in all his poems, speaks of his love for God. He tells us the Sufi loves the night, when he can be alone either with God's soothing presence or torturing absence. We know what Rumi means if we have ever seen another through the lens of our anima or animus. We have known the love of God in the fana by which we have passed through our beloved into an extraordinary clarity. Such a night is the center around which our life revolves:

Night comes so people can sleep like fish in black water. Then day.

Some people pick up their tools.
Others become the making itself.

(1986: 38)

The black water he speaks of may also be called the black tresses of Layla, who personifies the night. Water and ocean in Rumi's symbolic language always refer to God or the life in God that we enter through our fana. Rumi also tells us that these moments of union in which we "sleep like fish" transform the rest of life. If we have really passed away, we no longer "pick up our tools" and work at things from the outside. We become our work; and our daytime life, too, is suffused with love.

In a similar vein, Jung says that analysis does not work unless the analysand fulfills his "duty to life" (1917/43: par. 113). Psychological transformation does not happen only—or even primarily—in the consulting room. Rather, God willing, patients gain a certain understanding in the therapeutic dialogue that sends them back out into life. When we fall in love, we find ourselves caught in a flow of psychic energy that takes us passionately into life; and this is by no means limited to erotic pursuits. In my practice as an analyst, I have seen repeatedly that a man's professional life and his life in relationship are connected. When he loses contact with his anima, he loses interest in both spheres; and when he regains it in one, he regains it in the other. Hillman says as much in his book on anima: "Loss of anima means both the loss of internal animation and external animism" (1985: 109). Anima and animus are not something to be conquered. They must be lived. That is to say, we must live the life into which they draw us. For they open to us the course of our individuation when they mediate the Self and bring our beloved into focus. Most people experience this draw of destiny in an unmistakable manner only through relationship. How to follow such a fascination, and not get led astray, is not easy. This is why Jung says, "If the encounter with the shadow is the 'apprentice-piece' in the individual's development, then that with the anima is the 'master-piece'" (1934/54: par. 61).

Anima and animus lead us on a path of recreating ourselves. This book describes the psychological and spiritual dimensions of that path. It is both archetypal and personal. We all have a great deal in common as we pursue this course, but it is in each case an individual journey. The guidelines are found within, in our development through anima and animus of a confident relationship with Self.

BIBLIOGRAPHY

- Abelard and Heloise (1974). The Letters of Abelard and Heloise. Trl., B. Radice. New York: Penguin.
- Allende, I. (1985). The House of the Spirits. Trl., M. Bogin. New York: A. A. Knopf.
- Andersen, H. C. (1974). A Treasury of Hans Christian Andersen. Trl., E. C. Haugaard. Garden City, NY: Nelson Doubleday.
- Anonymous. (1950/67). The I Ching or Book of Changes. Trl., Chinese to German, R. Wilhelm; German to English, C. F. Baynes. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Anonymous (1969). The Quest of the Holy Grail. Trl., P. M. Matarasso. New York: Penguin.
- Anonymous (1980). The Opera Libretto Library. New York: Crown Publishers and Avenel Books.
- Anonymous (1981). The Cloud of Unknowing. Ed., J. Walsh. New York: Paulist.
- Arasteh, A. R. (1980). Growth to Selfhood, the Sufi Contribution. London: Routledge & Kegan Paul.
- Augustine (1984). Selected Writings. Trl., M. T. Clark. New York: Paulist Press.
- Balint, M. (1968). The Basic Fault: Therapeutic Aspects of Regression. New York: Brunner/Mazel.
- Basham, A. L. (1954). The Wonder That Was India: A Survey of the Indian Sub-Continent Before the Coming of the Muslims. New York: Grove Press.
- Bedier, J. (1965). The Romance of Tristan and Iseult. Trl., H. Belloc; completed, P. Rosenfeld. New York: Vintage.
- Benet, W. R. (1987). Benet's Reader's Encyclopedia. New York: Harper and Row.
- Benfey, C. (1987). "Lady in the Dark." New York Review of Books (March, 26) 34(5): 46-49.
- Berg, A. (1977). Lulu, opera in three acts. Trl., A. Jacobs. Vienna: Universal Edition.
- Bergman, I. (1960). The Devil's Eye: A Rondo Capriccioso. Svensk Filmindustri.

- Bernstein, A. (1933). Three Blue Suits. Athens, Oh: Ohio University Press, 1988.
- Bernstein, A. (1938). The Journey Down. Athens, Oh: Ohio University Press, 1987.
- Beroul (1970). The Romance of Tristan and the Tale of Tristan's Madness. Trl., A. S. Fedrick. New York: Penguin.
- Bonewits, P. E. I. (1971/79). Real Magic: An Introductory Treatise on the Basic Principles of Yellow Magic. Berkeley, CA: Creative Arts Book Company.
- Bridger, D., with S. Wolk. (1962) The New Jewish Encyclopedia. New York: Behrman House.
- Brontë, E. (1847). Wuthering Heights. New York: New American Library, Signet Classic, 1959.
- Buber, M. (1958). Hasidism and Modern Man. Ed., and trl., M. Friedman. New York: Harper Torchbooks.
- Buber, M. (1960). The Origin and Meaning of Hasidism. Ed., and trl., M. Friedman. New York: Harper Torchbooks.
- Byron, G. G. (1824). Don Juan. New York: Modern Library, 1949.
- Campbell, J. (1964). The Masks of God: Occidental Mythology. New York: Viking.
- Campbell, J. (1974). The Mythic Image. Assisted by M. J. Abadie. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Carotenuto, A. (1982). A Secret Symmetry: Sabina Spielrein Between Jung and Freud. Trl., A. Pomerans, J. Shepley, & K. Winston. New York: Pantheon.
- Casanova, G. (1797). The Life and Memoirs of Casanova. Trl., A. Machen; selected and ed., G. D. Gribble. New York: Da Capo Press, 1929.
- Castaneda, C. (1971). A Separate Reality: Further Conversations with Don Juan. New York: Simon & Schuster.
- Castaneda, C. (1972). Journey to Ixtlan: The Lessons of Don Juan. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Castaneda, C. (1987). The Power of Silence: Further Lessons of don Juan. New York: Simon and Schuster.
- Castillejo, I. C. de (1973). Knowing Woman: A Feminine Psychology. New York: Harper Colophon.

- Chittick, W. C. (1983). The Sufi Path of Love: The Spiritual Teachings of Rumi. Albany: State University of New York.
- Coleridge, S. T. (1985). Samuel Taylor Coleridge. Ed. H. J. Jackson. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Conze, E. (1951). Buddhism: Its Essence and Development. New York: Harper Torchbooks.
- Corbin, H. (1969). Creative Imagination in the Sufism of Ibn Arabi. Trl. R. Manheim. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Crowley, A. (n.d.). Magick in Theory and Practice. New York: Castle Books.
- Donald, D. H. (1987). Look Homeward: A Life of Thomas Wolfe. New York: Fawcett Columbine.
- Dostoyevsky, F. (1848). The Insulted and Injured. Trl. C. Garnett. New York: Grove Press, 1962.
- Dostoyevsky, F. (1880). The Brothers Karamazov. Trl., D. Magarshack. Harmondsworth, Middlesex: Penguin, 1958.
- Dupre, L. (1980). "The Mystical Experience of the Self and Its Philosophical Significance." In Woods (1980): 449-466.
- Duras, M. (1964). The Ravishing of Lol Stein. Trl., R. Seaver. New York: Pantheon, 1966.
- Duras, M. (1984). The Lover. Trl. B. Bray. New York: Pantheon, 1985.
- Eckhart, M. (1981). Meister Eckhart: The Essential Sermons, Commentaries, Treatises, and Defense. Trl., Introduction, E. Colledge, B. McGinn. New York: Paulist.
- Edwards, P. (Ed.). (1967). The Encyclopedia of Philosophy in 8 Vols. New York: Macmillan & The Free Press.
- Eibl-Eibesfeld, I. (1978). Love and Hate: The Natural History of Behavior Patterns. Trl. G. Strachan. New York: Schocken.
- Eliade, M. (1951/64). Shamanism, Archaic Techniques of Ecstasy. Trl., W. R. Trask. New York: Pantheon.
- Eliade, M. (1954). Yoga, Immortality and Freedom. Trl. W. R. Trask. 2nd. Edn. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969.
- Ellenberger, H. F. (1970). The Discovery of the Unconscious: The History and Evolution of Dynamic Psychiatry. New York: Basic Books.

- Eschenbach, W. von. (1961). Parzival. Trl., H. M. Mustard & C. E. Passage. New York: Vintage.
- Flaubert, G. (1856). Madame Bovary. [n. trl.] New York: Grosset & Dunlap, [n.d.].
- Fox, D. A. (1973). The Vagrant Lotus: An Introduction of Buddhist Philosophy. Philadelphia: Westminster.
- Garcia Marquez, G. G. (1985). Love in the Time of Cholera. Trl., E. Grossman. New York: A. A. Knopf, 1988.
- Gibb, H. A. R. (1953). Mohammedanism: An Historical Survey. 2nd. Edn. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Goldberg, A., Ed. (1978). The Psychology of the Self: A Casebook. New York: International Universities Press.
- Gray, W. G. (1971). Magical Ritual Methods. Cheltenham, Glos., England: Helios.
- Grimm. (1857). Die Maerchen der Brueder Grimm: Kinder- und Hausmaerchen. Munich: Wilhelm Goldmann.
- Grimm. (1972). The Complete Grimm's Fairy Tales. Trl. M. Hunt; revised, J. Stern. New York: Pantheon.
- Happold, F. C. (1970). Mysticism: A Study and an Anthology. Harmondsworth, Middlesex: Penguin.
- Hardy, T. (1874). Far from the Madding Crowd. New York: New American Library, Signet Classic, 1984.
- Hardy, T. (1886). The Life and Death of the Mayor of Casterbridge: A Story of a Man of Character. New York: New American Library, 1980.
- Hardy, T. (1891). Tess of the D'Urbervilles. New York: New American Library, 1964.
- Hardy, T. (1896). Jude the Obscure. New York: New American Library, 1961.
- Hardy, T. (1912). The Return of the Native. New York: Bantam, 1981.
- Haule, J. R. (1983). "Archetypes and Integration: Exploring the Janetian roots of Analytical Psychology." Journal of Analytical Psychology, 28 253-67.
- Haule, J. R. (1984). "From Somnambulism to the Archetypes: The French Roots of Jung's Split with Freud." Psychoanalytic Review, 71(4): 635-659.

- Heidegger, M. (1959). Discourse on Thinking. Trl., J. M. Anderson & E. H. Freund. New York: Harper and Row, 1968.
- Hillman, J. (1983). Archetypal Psychology: A Brief Account. Dallas: Spring Publications.
- Hillman, J. (1985). Anima: An Anatomy of a Personified Notion. Dallas: Spring Publications.
- Hobson, R. F. (1961/71). "The Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious." M. Fordham, et. al., Eds., Analytical Psychology: A Modern Science. London: Academic Press, 1980, pp. 66-75.
- Hobson, R. F. (1985). Forms of Feeling: The Heart of Psychotherapy. London & New York: Tavistock Publications.
- Ignatius Loyola. (1555). The Autobiography of St. Ignatius Loyola with Related Documents. Ed., J. C. Olin; trl., J. F. O'Callaghan. New York: Harper Torchbooks, 1974.
- Izutsu, T. (1983). Sufism and Taoism: A Comparative Study of Key Philosophical Concepts. Berkeley: University of California Press.
- Janet, P. (1903). Les obsessions et la psychasthenie, in two volumes; Volume 2 in collaboration with F. Raymond. New York: Arno, 1976.
- Janet, P. (1919). Psychological Healing: A Historical and Clinical Study, in two volumes. Trl., (1925) E. & E. Paul. New York: Arno, 1976.
- John of the Cross. (1979). The Collected Works. Trl., K. Kavanaugh & O. Rodriguez. Washington, D.C.: Institute of Carmelite Studies.
- John of the Cross. (1987). Selected Writings. Trl., K. Kavanaugh. New York: Paulist Press.
- Johnson, R. A. (1983). We: Understanding the Psychology of Romantic Love. San Francisco: Harper & Row.
- Jung, C. G. (1912/52). Symbols of Transformation: An Analysis of the Prelude to a Case of Schizophrenia. Coll. Works, Vol. 5. 2nd Edn. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1967.
- Jung, C. G. (1917/43). "On the Psychology of the Unconscious." In Two Essays on Analytical Psychology, 2nd Edn. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. New York: Pantheon, pp. 3-125.
- Jung, C. G. (1919/48). "Instinct and the Unconscious." In The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche, Collected Works, Vol. 8. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. New York: Pantheon, 1960, pp. 129-38.

- Jung, C. G. (1928/35). "The Relations Between the Ego and the Unconscious." Two Essays in Analytical Psychology, 2nd Edn. Collected Works, Vol. 7. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1966, pp. 123-241.
- Jung, C. G. (1928/48). "On Psychic Energy." Coll. Wks., Vol. 8, The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. New York: Pantheon, 1960, pp. 3-66.
- Jung, C. G. (1934/54). "Archetypes of the Collective Unconscious." In The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious, 2nd Edn., Collected Works, Vol. 9i. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969, pp. 3-41.
- Jung, C. G. (1938/84). Dream Analysis: Notes of the Seminar Given in 1928-1930. Ed., W. McGuire. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Jung, C. G. (1939). "Conscious, Unconscious, and Individuation." Coll. Wks, Vol. 9i, The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious, 2nd. Edn. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969, pp. 275-289.
- Jung, C. G. (1939/50). "Concerning Rebirth." In The Archetypes and the Collective Unconscious, 2nd Edn. Collected Works, Vol. 9i. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1969, pp. 111-34.
- Jung, C. G. (1944/52). Psychology and Alchemy. Coll. Wks. Vol. 12., 2nd. Edn. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1968.
- Jung, C. G. (1945/48). "On the Nature of Dreams." Coll. Wks, Vol. 8, The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. New York: Pantheon, 1960, pp. 281-297.
- Jung, C. G. (1946). The Psychology of the Transference. Coll. Wks. Vol. 16. The Practice of Psychotherapy. 2nd. Edn. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. New York: Pantheon, 1966, pp. 163-323.
- Jung, C. G. (1946/54). "On the Nature of the Psyche." Coll. Works. Vol. 8. The Structure and Dynamics of the Psyche. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. New York: Pantheon, 1960, pp. 159-234.
- Jung, C. G. (1952/55). "Synchronicity: An Acausal Connecting Principle." Collected Works, 8: 417-531. New York: Pantheon, 1960.

- Jung, C. G. (1955,56). Mysterium Conjunctionis. Collected Works, Vol. 14. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. Princeton: Princeton University Press, 1963.
- Jung, C. G. (1958). "Schizophrenia." Coll. Works, Vol. 3. The Psychogenesis of Mental Disease. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. New York: Pantheon, 1960, pp. 256-71.
- Jung, C. G. (1961). Memories, Dreams, Reflections. Recorded and ed., A. Jaffe. Trl., R. & C. Winston. New York: Pantheon.
- Jung, C. G. (1975). Letters, in two volumes. Selected and ed., G. Adler with A. Jaffe. Trl., R. F. C. Hull. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Jung, E. & M.-L. von Franz. (1960). The Grail Legend, 2nd Edn. Trl., A. Dykes. Boston: Sigo, 1986.
- Klein, C. (1979). Aline. New York: Harper and Row.
- Kohut, H. (1977). The Restoration of the Self. New York: International Universities Press.
- Kohut, H. (1984). How Does Analysis Cure? Ed., A. Goldberg with P. Stepanky. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Kundera, M. (1967). The Joke. Trl., M. H. Heim. New York: Penguin, 1982.
- Laclos, C. de. (1782). Les Liaisons Dangereuses. Trl., P. W. K. Stone. Harmondsworth, Middlesex: Penguin, 1961.
- Larousse. (1959). Larousse Encyclopedia of Mythology. London: Paul Hamlyn.
- Lawrence, D. H. (1913). Sons and Lovers. New York: Signet Classic, 1985.
- Lawrence, D. H. (1920). Women in Love. Harmondsworth, Middlesex: Penguin, 1982.
- Lawrence, D. H. (1985). Mr. Noon. Ed., L. Vasey. New York: Penguin.
- Leach, M. & J. Fried (Eds.). (1984). Funk & Wagnalls Standard Dictionary of Folklore, Mythology and Legend. San Francisco: Harper and Row.
- Levi-Strauss, C. (1967). Structural Anthropology. Trl., C. Jacobson & B. G. Schoepf. New York: Anchor.
- Levy-Bruhl, L. (1923). Primitive Mentality. Trl., L. A. Claire. Boaton: Beacon Press, 1966.

- Lincoln, V. (1984). Teresa: A Woman, A Biography of Teresa of Avila. Ed., E. Rivers & A. T. de Nicolas. Albany: State University of New York Press.
- Lorde, A. (1982). Zami: A New Spelling of My Name. Trumansberg, N.Y.: Crossing Press.
- McBrien, R. P. (1981). Catholicism: Study Edition. Minneapolis: Winston Press.
- McKenzie, J. L. (1965). Dictionary of the Bible. New York: Macmillan.
- Malory, T. (1969). Le Morte D'Arthur, in two vols. Ed., J. Cowen. New York: Penguin, .
- Marie de France (1986). The Lais of Marie de France. Trl. G. S. Burgess and K. Busby. New York: Penguin. Pp. 111 - 126.
- Moliere, J. B. P. (1665). "Don Juan, or, The Stone Guest." In Tartuffe and Other Plays by Moliere. Trl., D. M. Frame. New York: New American Library, 1967.
- Moustakas, C. E. (1961). Loneliness. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall.
- Moustakas, C. E. (1975). The Touch of Loneliness. Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall.
- Mozart, W. A. (1787). Don Giovanni. Libretto, L. da Ponte. Trl., L. Salter. [no city] Germany: Deutsche Grammophon Gesellschaft #2711006, [n.d.].
- Nasr, S. H. (1972). Sufi Essays. Albany: State University of New York Press.
- Neruda, P. (1953). The Captain's Verses. Trl., D. D. Walsh. New York: New Directions, 1972.
- Nicholson, R. A. (1914). The Mystics of Islam. Boston: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1963.
- Nicholson, R. A. (1921). Studies in Islamic Mysticism. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Nikhilananda. (1963). The Upanishads (Abridged Edition). New York: Harper Torchbooks.
- Niwano, N. (1976). Buddhism for Today: A Modern Interpretation of the Threefold Lotus Sutra. Trl., K. Miyasaka. New York & Tokyo: Weatherhill/Kosei.

- Nizami. (1959). Die sieben Geschichten der sieben Prinzessinen. Trl., R. Gelpke. Zurich: Manesse.
- Nizami. (1966). The Story of Layla and Majnun. Trl. and ed., R. Gelpke with E. Mattin and G. Hill. Boulder: Shambala.
- O'Flaherty, W. D. (1973). Siva: The Erotic Ascetic. New York: Oxford University Press.
- Otto, R. (1917). The Idea of the Holy: An Inquiry into the Non-Rational Factor in the Idea of the Divine and Its Relation to the Rational. Trl., J. W. Harvey. New York: Oxford University Press, 1958.
- Ozak, M. (1987). Love Is the Wine: Talks of a Sufi Master in America. Ed., R. Frager. Putney, Vt: Threshold.
- Person, E. S. (1988). Dreams of Love and Fateful Encounters: The Power of Romantic Passion. New York: W. W. Norton.
- Peters, F. E. (1967). Greek Philosophical Terms: A Historical Lexicon. New York: New York University Press.
- Rabi'ah al-'Adwaiyah (1988). Doorkeeper of the Heart: Versions of Rabi'ah. Trl., C. Upton. Putney, Vt: Threshold Books.
- Remarque, E. M. (1945). Arch of Triumph. Trl. W. Sorell & D. Lindley. New York: D. Appleton Century.
- Rhein, J. von (1989). Untitled review of Seller's production of Tannhaeuser. In Opera News 53(12), March 4: pp. 37f.
- Rice, C. (1964). The Persian Sufis. London: G. Allen & Unwin, Ltd.
- Rinpoche, K. (1986). The Dharma That Benefits All Beings Impartially Like the Light of the Sun and the Moon. Trl., J. Gyatso. Ed., The Kagyu Thubten Choling Translation Committee. Albany: State Univerisyt of New York Press.
- Rougemont, D. de (1956/72). Love in the Western World, trl. M. Belgion. Princeton: Princeton University Press.
- Rougemont, D. de (1973). "Love," in P. P. Wiener (ed.), Dictionary of the History of Ideas. New York: Scribner's Sons.
- Rumi, J. (1981). Night and Sleep: Versions. Trl., C. Barks and R. Bly. Cambridge, Ma: Yellow Moon Press.
- Rumi, J. (1984). Open Secret: Versions of Rumi. Trl., J. Moyne & C. Barks. Putney, VT: Threshold Books.

- Rumi, J. (1986). Unseen Rain: Quatrains of Rumi. Trl., J. Moyne & C. Barks. Putney, VT: Threshold Books.
- Rumi, J. (1987). We Are Three: New Rumi Poems. Trl., C. Barks. Athens, GA: Maypop Books.
- Rumi, J. (1988). This Longing: Poetry, Teaching Stories, and Selected Letters. Versions by C. Barks and J. Moyne. Putney Vt.: Threshold Books.
- Schimmel, A. (1975). Mystical Dimensions of Islam. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Schimmel, A. (1982). As Through a Veil: Mystical Poetry in Islam. New York: Columbia University Press.
- Scholem, G. (1941). Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism. New York: Schocken.
- Scholem, G. (1971). The Messianic Idea in Judaism and Other Essays on Jewish Spirituality. New York: Schocken.
- Searles, H. (1959). "Oedipal Love in the Countertransference." Collected Papers on Schizophrenia and Related Subjects. New York: International Universities Press, 1965.
- Shaw, G. B. (1903). Man and Superman: A Comedy and a Philosophy. Harmondsworth. Middlesex: Penguin, 1946.
- Shostak, M. (1981). Nisa: The Life and Words of a !Kung Woman. Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press.
- Silesius, A. (1986). Angelus Silesius: The Cherubinic Wanderer. Trl. and Foreword, M. Shradly. New York: Paulist.
- Smith, M. (1984). Rabi'a the Mystic and Her Fellow-Saints in Islam. Cambridge: Cambridge University Press.
- Stein, R. (1973/84). Incest and Human Love: The Betrayal of the Soul in Psychotherapy, 2nd. Edn. Dallas: Spring Publications.
- Strassburg, G. von. (1960). Tristan. Trl. A. T. Hatto. Harmondsworth, Middlesex: Penguin.
- Stutman, S. (Ed.). (1983). My Other Loneliness: Letters of Thomas Wolfe and Aline Bernstein. Chapel Hill: University of North Carolina Press.
- Tanizaki, J. (1923). Naomi. Trl., A. H. Chambers. New York: Knopf, 1985.

- Teresa of Avila. (1577). The Interior Castle. Trl., K. Kavanaugh & O. Rodriguez. New York: Paulist, 1979.
- Tillich, P. (1963). Systematic Theology, in 3 Vols. Chicago: University of Chicago Press.
- Time-Life Editors (n.d.,a). The Lore of Love. Alexandria, VA: Time-Life Books.
- Time-Life Editors (n.d.,b). Tales of Terror. Alexandria, VA: Time-Life Books.
- Todi, J. da. (1982). The Lauds. Trl., S. & E. Hughes. New York: Paulist Press.
- Tolstoy, L. (1876). Anna Karenin. Trl., R. Edmunds. New York: Viking Penguin, 1978.
- Trungpa, C. (1973). Cutting Through Spiritual Materialism. Ed., J. Baker & M. Casper. Boston & London: Shambhala.
- Twain, M. (1889). A Connecticut Yankee at King Arthur's Court. New York: Penguin, 1971.
- Vatsyayana. (1965). Kama Sutra: The Hindu Ritual of Love. New York: Castle Books.
- Verdi, G. (1982). La Traviata. (An F. Zeffirelli Film). Universal City, CA: M. C. A. Home Video.
- Vergil, M. P. (1961). The Aeneid. Trl., P. Dickinson. New York: New American Library.
- Wagner, R. (n.d.). Tristan und Isolde. London Records #A4506. Libretto not paginated; trl. not identified.
- Wagner, R. (1845/61). Tannhaeuser. Hollywood, Ca: Paramount Home Video, 1986.
- Welwood, J., (Ed.). (1985a). Awakening the Heart: East/West Approaches to Psychotherapy and the Healing Relationship. Boston: Shambhala.
- Welwood, J., (Ed.). (1985b). Challenge of the Heart: Love, Sex, and Intimacy in Changing Times. Boston: Shambhala.
- Wharton, E. (1920). The Age of Innocence. New York: Macmillan/Collier, 1968.
- Wilde, O. (1930). Salome: A Tragedy in One Act. [n. trl.] New York: Williams, Belasco & Meyers.

- Wilson, P. L. & N. Pourjavady (Trl. & Commentary). (1987). The Drunken Universe: An Anthology of Persian Sufi Poetry. Grand Rapids: Phanes Press.
- Wolfe, T. (1935). Of Time and the River: A Legend of Man's Hunger in His Youth. New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1971.
- Wolfe, T. (1939). The Web and the Rock. New York: Harper and Row, 1973(a).
- Wolfe, T. (1940). You Can't Go Home Again. New York: Harper and Row, 1973(b).
- Woods, R. (Ed.). (1980). Understanding Mysticism. Garden City, NY: Image/Doubleday.
- Zaunert, P. (Ed.) (1964). Deutsche Maerchen seit Grimm. Duesseldorf: Eugen Diederichs
- Zimmer, H. (1946). Myths and Symbols in Indian Art and Civilization. Ed., J. Campbell. Princeton: Princeton University Press.

CREDITS

The author thanks those who have directly or indirectly granted permission to reprint copyrighted material, including the following:

Alfred A. Knopf: The House of the Spirits by Isabel Allende, translated by Magda Bogin, translation copyright © 1985 by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. Love in the Time of Cholera by Gabriel Garcia Marquez, translated by Edith Grossman, copyright © 1988 by Alfred A. Knopf, Inc. Originally published in Columbia as El Amor En Los Tiempos De Colera by Editorial Oveja Negra Ltda., Bogota, copyright © 1985 by Gabriel Garcia Marquez. Reprinted by permission of Alfred A. Knopf, Inc.

Arthur Machen Estate: The Life and Memoirs of Cassanova translated by Arthur Machen (London: A.M. Heath, 1929). Reprinted by permission of the Estate of the late Arthur Machen.

Charles Scribner's Sons: The Age of Innocence by Edith Wharton, copyright © 1920 by D. Appleton and Company, copyright renewed © 1948 by William R. Tyler. Dictionary of the History of Ideas, Philip P. Wiener, editor in chief, copyright © 1973 by Charles Scribner's Sons. Reprinted by permission of Charles Scribner's Sons, an imprint of Macmillan Publishing Company.

Columbia University Press: As Through a Veil: Mystical Poetry in Islam by Anemarie Schimmel, copyright © 1982 by Columbia University Press. Used by permission of Columbia University Press.

Cross Publishing Company: The Inner Loneliness by Sebastian Moore, copyright © 1982 by Sebastian Moore. Reprinted by permission of Cross Publishing Company.

Crossing Press: Zami: A New Spelling of My Name by Audre Lorde, copyright © 1982 by Audre Lorde. Reprinted by permission of Crossing Press.

Edla Frankau Cusick: The Journey Down by A. Bernstein (Athens: Ohio University Press, 1987). Three Blue Suits by A. Bernstein (Athens: Ohio University Press, 1988). Reprinted by permission of Edla Frankau Cusick.

Deutsche Grammophon: Don Giovanni by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart and L. da Ponte, translated by Lionel Salter, translation © 1959 by Lionel Salter. Reprinted by kind permission of Deutsche Grammophon/Polydor International GmbH, Hamburg.

European American Music: Lulu, Act III, by Alban Berg, English translation by Arthur Jacobs, copyright © 1977 by Universal Edition A.G. Wien, English translation copyright © 1978 by Universal Edition A.G. Wien, all rights reserved. Used by permission of European American Music, Distributors Corporation, sole U.S. and Canadian agent for Universal Edition A.G. Wien.

Harper & Row: Buddhism: Its Essence and Development by E. Conze, copyright © 1959 by Harper & Row Publishers, Inc. The web and the Rock by Thomas Wolfe, copyright © 1937, 1938, 1939 by Maxwell Perkins as the Executor of the Estate of Thomas Wolfe, renewed 1965 by Paul Gitlin, CTA/Administrator of the Estate of Thomas Wolfe. You Can't Go Home Again by Thomas Wolfe, copyright © 1934, 1937, 1938, 1939, 1940 by Maxwell Perkins as the Executor of the Estate of Thomas Wolfe. Reprinted by permission of Harper & Row Publishers, Inc.

Laurence Pollinger Ltd. and the Estate of Mrs. Frieda Lawrence Ravagli: Mr. Noon by D.H. Lawrence, edited by L. Vasey (New York: Penguin, 1985). Reprinted by permission of Laurence Pollinger Ltd. and the Estate of Mrs. Frieda Lawrence Ravagli.

Oxford University Press: The Idea of the Holy: An Inquiry into the Non-Rational Factor in the Idea of the Divine and Its Relation to the Rational by Rudolf Otto, translated by J.W. Harvey (2nd ed. 1950). Mohammedanism: An Historical Survey by H.A.R. Gibb (2nd ed. 1953). Siva: The Erotic Ascetic by W.D. O'Flaherty (1973). Reprinted by permission of Oxford University Press.

Pantheon Books: The Lover by Marguerite Duras, translated by B. Bray, copyright © 1985 by Pantheon Books. The Ravishing of Lol Stein by Marguerite Duras, translated by R. Seaver, copyright © 1966 by Pantheon Books. A Secret Symmetry: Sabina Spielrein Between Jung and Freud by Aldo Carotenuto, translated by Krishna Winston, Arno Pomerans, and John Shepley. Reprinted by permission of Pantheon Books, a division of Random House, Inc.

Paulist Press: The Lauds by Jacopone da Todi, translated by Serge and Elizabeth Hughes, copyright © 1982 by Paulist Press. Selected Writings by Augustine, translated by MT Clark, copyright © 1984 by Paulist Press. Reprinted by permission of Paulist Press.

Penguin Classics: Anna Karenina by L.N. Tolstoy, translated by Rosemary Edmonds, copyright © 1954 by Rosemary Edmonds. The Brothers Karamozov by Fyodor Dostoyevsky, translated by David Magarshack, copyright © 1958 by David Magarshack. The Lais of Marie de France translated by Glyn S. Burgess and Keith Busby, copyright © 1986 by Glyn S. Burgess and Keith Busby. Les Liaisons Dangereuses by Choderlos de Laclos, translated by P.W.K. Stone, copyright © 1961 by P.w.K. Stone. Tristan by Gottfried von Strassburg, translated by A.T. Hatto, copyright © 1960 by A.T. Hatto. Reproduced by permission of Penguin Books Ltd.

Prentice-Hall: Loneliness by C.E. Moustakas, copyright © 1961 by C.E. Moustakas. Reprinted by permission of Prentice-Hall Inc., a division of Simon and Schuster, Inc.

Princeton University Press: The Collected Works of C.G. Jung translated by R.F.C. Hull, Bollingen Series 20, Vol. 3: The Psychogenesis of Mental Disease, copyright © 1960 by Princeton University Press; Vol. 5: Symbols of Transformation, copyright © 1956 by Princeton University Press; Vol. 7: Two Essays on Analytical Psychology, copyright © 1953, 2nd ed. © 1966 by Princeton University Press. Creative Imagination in the Sufism of Ibn' Arabi by Henry Corbin, translated by R. Manheim, Bollingen Series 91, copyright © 1969 by Princeton University Press. Dream Analysis: Notes of the Seminar Given in 1928-1930 by C.G. Jung, edited by W. McGuire, Bollingen Series 99, copyright © 1983 by Princeton University Press. The I Ching or Book of Changes translated from Chinese to German by Richard Wilhelm, rendered into English by Cary F. Baynes, Bollingen Series 19, copyright © 1950, 1967, renewed 1977 by Princeton University Press. Letters by C.G. Jung, edited by Gerhard Adler and Aniela Jaffe, translated by R.F.C. Hull, Bollingen Series 95, Vol. 1: 1906-1950, copyright © 1971 by Princeton University Press; Vol. 2: 1951-1961, copyright © 1953, 1975 by Princeton University Press. Love in the Western World by Denis de Rougemont, copyright © 1940, 1956 by Pantheon, 1983 by Princeton University Press. Myths and Symbols in Indian Art and Civilization by Heinrich Zimmer, edited by Joseph Campbell, Bollingen Series 6, copyright © 1946, 1973 by Princeton University Press. Shammanism: Archaic Techniques of Ecstasy by Mircea Eliade, translated by Willard R. Trask, Bollingen Series 76, copyright © 1964 by Princeton University Press. Yoga, Immortality, and Freedom by Mircea Eliade, translated by Willard R. Trask, Bollingen Series 56, copyright © 1958 by Princeton University Press.

Schocken Books: Major Trends in Jewish Mysticism by Gershom Scholem, copyright © 1941 by Gershom Scholem. Reprinted by permission of Schocken Books, published by Pantheon Books, a division of Random House, Inc.

The Society of Authors: Man and Superman by George Bernard Shaw (Harmondsworth, Middlesex: Penguin, 1946). Reprinted by permission of the Society of Authors on behalf of the Bernard Shaw Estate.

State University of New York Press: Teresa A Woman) A Biography of Teresa of Avila by Victoria Lincoln, edited by E. Rivers and A.T. de Nicholas, copyright © 1984 by State University of New York Press. Reprinted by permission of State University of New York Press.

Threshold Books: Open Secret: Versions of Rumi by Jelaluddin Rumi, translated by John Moyne and Coleman Barks, 1984. Reprinted by permission of Threshold Books, RD 4, Box 600, Putney, Vermont 05346.

University of North Carolina Press: Mystical Dimensions of Islam by Annemarie Schimmel, copyright © 1975 by University of North Carolina Press. Reprinted by permission of University of North Carolina Press.

Viking Penguin: The Masks of God: Occidental Mythology by Joseph Campbell, copyright © 1964 by Joseph Campbell, all rights reserved. Reprinted by permission of Viking Penguin, a division of Penguin Books USA, Inc.

Wallace Literary Agency: Aline by Carole Klein (New York: Harper & Row, 1979), copyright © 1979 by Carole Klein, reprinted by permission of the Wallace Literary Agency.

Washington Province of Discalced Carmelites: The Collected works of St. Teresa of Avila, Vol 2, translated by Kieran Kavanaugh and Otilio Rodriquez, copyright © 1980 by Washington Province of Discalced Carmelites. Reprinted by permission of Washington Province of Discalced Carmelites, ICS Publications, 2131 Lincoln Rd., N.E., Washington, D.C. 20002.

INDEX

A

Abdul, the story of 82, 85
Abelard and Heloise 24
adulterous love 142, 143, 242
adventure(s) 62, 71, 98, 150,
201, 204, 207, 215, 219,
224, 241, 252
Aeneas 156-159, 172-173
Aeneid 156, 158
Allende, Isabel 175, 194
The House of the Spirits 175,
194
"Allerleirauh" (Grimm fairy tale)
118-121, 123
Allerleirauh, the story of 119
Andersen, Hans Christian 39
Turandot legend 39
angel(s) 161, 164, 171, 190,
196-199, 205, 249, 251
Averroes on 198, 199
Avicennan theory of 198
love's 190
anima 9, 13-14, 16-21, 27, 29,
31-32, 35, 39, 40, 42-44,
47, 49-51, 55, 56, 74, 76,
80, 89-90, 99, 103-104,
121, 138, 142, 147, 179,
181, 182, 185-186, 192,
200, 202, 211, 213, 231,
235-236, 242, 245, 252
as lens 17-19, 39, 44, 47, 49,
56, 76, 90, 104, 138, 157,
186, 211, 213, 231, 236,
242, 245, 252

as mask 16, 18, 44, 89, 192
Imagination and 138
anima and animus
description of 14
animus 9, 13-14, 16-21, 27, 29,
32, 39, 41-42, 44, 47, 49,
51, 54-56, 74, 76, 90, 99,
104, 138, 157, 192, 211,
213, 245, 252
Anna Karenina (Tolstoy)
love's wound in 71
Apollo 143
Aquinas, Thomas 104
Arasteh, Reza 10
archetypes of relationship 13, 19
Artemis 143, 145, 234
Artemis and Orion 234
Arthur, (King of the Britons) 22,
199, 201, 209, 211, 215-
216, 218-219, 226-227,
229-230, 236, 242-247
Atharva Veda 104, 105
Athena 143
Augustine, Saint 14, 113

B

Baal Shem Tov (See also Israel ben Eliezer) 109
Balint, Michael 63-65, 93
baqa (gain of Self) 10, 60
ben Judah, Joseph 197

Berg, Alban 15, 39
Lulu 15-16, 39, 44
 Bergman, Ingmar 116, 122, 124
The Devil's Eye 116
 Bernstein, Aline 166, 171, 173-176, 182, 187
The Journey Down 166, 171-172
Three Blue Suits 168
 Beroul
Romance of Tristan 3
 Brihadaranyaka Upanishad 146
 Brontë, Emily 30, 45, 78, 138
Women in Love 79, 86, 118, 146-147
Wuthering Heights 30-31, 45, 138, 175
 Buber, Martin 110
 Buddha 152-153
 three bodies of 152
 Buddhism 59, 84, 152
 Byron, Lord George Gordon 87, 122, 124, 127

C

Camelot 199, 209-210, 215, 218, 222, 225, 229-230, 240-244, 246-253
 Campbell, Joseph 145
 Carlos Castaneda 49, 72
 Casanova 117, 122, 124, 127-128, 130
 Catharism 2
 Celtic goddesses 210
 Christian mysticism 212

Cloud of Unknowing 17
 Coleridge, Samuel Taylor 77, 79
 "Kubla Khan" 77
 collective unconscious 13, 18, 46
 Corbin, Henry 3, 17, 196-198
 Creative Third (see also "The Third" 190

D

"dark night of the soul" 32, 37
 Demeter 27, 30
 and Persephone 30
 demon-lover 76, 79-81, 85-87, 89-90, 92-93, 95-96, 98-106, 111-112, 115, 124, 129, 190-191
 Dido 156-159, 165, 172-173 and Aeneas 158
Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg 161
 Dionysus 143
 god of fertility 143
 "distance amid presence" 36
 divine madness 4, 7, 45, 238 divine spark 90, 95, 97, 99, 101, 103-105, 107-108, 110, 112-115, 121, 123, 125, 132-135, 141, 153-154, 172-173, 179-180, 205, 211, 213, 218-219
 Donald, David Herbert 166-167, 170-172
 Doniger, Wendy
Siva: The Erotic Ascetic 141

Don Juan 73, 116-118, 121,
122, 124, 127, 130

Byron's 122

Moliere's 122

Mozart's 122

Dostoyevsky 80, 97-99, 111

Insulted and Injured 80, 97

The Brothers Karamazov 98

The Insulted and Injured 80

Duras, Marguerite

The Lover 96

The Ravishing of Lol Stein 169

E

Eckhart, Meister (Johannes) 10,
195, 197, 204, 213

Eliade, Mircea 48, 84, 102, 105

Eliduc, the story of 23

"enlargement of personality"
33-34

epiphany 153, 154

Eros and Psyche 27, 30

erotic bond 55, 76, 90, 120,
158, 172, 177, 186, 227

Eschenbach, Wolfram von 160,
165, 200, 214

Parzival 214

extramarital affair 236

F

fana ("loss of ego") 9-13, 15, 16-20, 60, 76, 118, 126,
128, 131, 157, 172, 220,
225, 234

Fisher King 62, 210

Flaubert, Gustave

Madame Bovary 80

G

Galahad 22, 200, 202, 209-216,
218-225, 227, 230, 234, 238, 241

as "The Good Knight" 210,
216, 224

Galahad's magic boat 213-215,
221-222, 225, 228, 241

Garcia Marquez, Gabriel 182,
184-185, 187

Love in the Time of Cholera 182

Gawain 209, 215-221, 223-226,
228-230, 233, 236, 240,
243-247

the Frustrations of 215

Gelassenheit 204, 213, 221-223,
228, 234, 239, 241, 245-247, 253

gnosis 4, 108-109, 132

Gnostic 103, 108, 197

Gnosticism 108

goddess of Wisdom

Metis 143

Greek mythology

of marital and adulterous love 142

Guigemar

love's wound 61-64, 69-74

Guinevere 3, 219, 225-230, 232-
234, 236, 238, 241-243,
247-248, 250

H

“happily ever after” 41, 96, 120, 203

Hardy, Thomas

Far from the Madding Crowd 25, 68

Tess of the D’Urbervilles 107

Hawthorne, Nathaniel 103

The Scarlet Letter 103

Heidegger, Martin

Discourse on Thinking 204f

Hermes 143

Hillman, James 20, 29, 95

Hinduism 70, 84, 105, 108

Holy Grail 22, 199, 202-203, 207, 209, 213, 215, 218, 221-223, 225-227, 238, 241-242

Holy Spirit 17, 33, 43, 196, 198, 201-202, 204, 207, 209, 213, 216-217, 223, 225-227, 232, 234, 236-238, 241-243, 246, 248-249, 252

Holy Trinity 219

Howari, the story of 100

humility 203, 235, 237

Hungarian knight 229, 234, 241

hungry ghosts, See also Jinn (genie) 84-86, 103

Husserl, Edmund 193

I

Ibn al-Arabi 3, 17-18, 196-199, 205

Ibnu’l-Farid 83

I Ching (Book of Changes) 74, 232

“Chen/The Arousing” 74

Ignatius Loyola, Saint 112-113

inborn releasing mechanisms (IRMs) 46-47, 58-59, 73, 79, 81, 84, 87, 90, 103, 121, 139

“inner nature” 27

instinct-archetypes 164

instincts 29, 45-47, 57, 59, 116, 207, 243

instinctual level of the psyche 68, 84

Islamic mysticism (See also Sufism) 2-3

Israel ben Eliezer (See also Baal Shem Tov) 109

Izutsu, Toshihiko 196

J

Janacek, Leos 35

Janet, Pierre 46

Jesus of Nazareth 12, 34, 49, 113, 152-154, 200-201, 213, 224-227, 229, 234-235, 238, 242

Jewish mysticism 108

Jili 83

Jinn 81-84, 86, 103

Queen of the 85, 87, 93

John of the Cross 8, 10, 32-35, 60-61, 78, 113, 249

Dark Night 34

Spiritual Canticle 60

joint woundedness 76, 176-177, 180, 189, 253

Joseph of Arimathea 200, 210

Jung, Carl Gustav 10, 13, 18, 20, 25-27, 29, 33-34, 43,
46-47, 49, 55, 57-58, 65,
70, 73, 181, 191, 206, 221-
222

Collected Works 46

The Psychology of the Transference 191

Jung, Emma 200

The Grail Legend 200

K

Kabbalah 108, 197

Kama (God or Heat of Desire)
141, 142, 151

Kama Sutra 151

Khidr ("The Green One") 196,
198-199, 201, 205, 207,
209, 217, 223, 227, 236,
249

King Arthur 199, 209, 215-216, 229, 242

Knights of the Holy Grail 203, 207

Knights of the Round Table
200, 230

Kohut, Heinz 11, 63-65, 93 on "narcissistic wound" 63-64

Kundera, Milan

The Joke 163

!Kung (N/um) 48-50

L

Laclos, Choderlos de 123-125, 130

Les Liaisons Dangereuses 123

Ladies of the Lake 210-211, 224, 232, 238

Lais of Marie de France 23, 61

the story of Eliduc 23

the story of Guigemar 61

the story of Yonec 177

Lancelot 3, 22, 199, 201-202,
204, 209, 216, 218-223,
225-230, 232-238, 240-
248, 250

After the Quest 228

and Guinevere 3, 226-228,
230, 232-234, 242-243,
248

Lancelot's quest 228

Lawrence, D.H. 63-64, 79, 86,
90, 137, 146-147

Mr. Noon 63

Sons and Lovers 79, 90, 137

Women in Love 79, 86, 118,
146-147

Layla and Majnun 6, 9, 13, 28,
30-31, 34, 47

the story of 28

Lévi-Strauss, Claude 50

Levy-Bruhl, Lucien 47

Lewis, Sinclair

Elmer Gantry 103

Liebesnacht ("night of love")
111-112, 134, 135

Lohengrin, the story of 41

loneliness 24, 26-33, 35, 73,
169, 175, 189

Lorde, Audre 169, 176

Love

goal of 9

love-death 180-181, 187

love affair

Platonic 97

love of God 3-4, 7, 12, 18-19, 32, 60, 70, 76, 90, 112-
115, 131, 203, 228, 248-249 love-play

adulterous/divine 144

and Zeus 142-143

as "epiphany" 153

love potion 3, 7, 22, 32, 34-36, 38-41, 47, 53, 59, 63, 78,
84, 118, 120, 132-133,
155, 177

lover's quarrel 151

love's unity 76

love's wound 59, 61

M

madness 1, 4, 6-9, 45, 151, 159, 167, 229, 237-238

magician 44-45, 51-52, 103

mahamaithuna "sexual act" 140

Majnun 6, 9, 13, 28-32, 34-36,
47, 49, 59-60, 188, 250

Malory, Thomas

Le Morte D'Arthur 199, 201,
216, 218, 226, 228-229,
235, 237, 242-243, 247

Marquise de Merteuil 123, 125,
129

Matarasso, Pauline

translator of Quest 212

Maya ("Illusion") 65-66

Mercury 156, 158

Merlin 243

Mitwelt (a co-world) 193, 195,
202, 247, 252

Mme. Bovary 80, 85, 87, 96,
128-129

Mme. de Merteuil 123

Mme. de Tourvel 123-126, 128-130

Moliere 117, 122, 124

Moses 78, 153, 162, 181, 198, 199

"Mother Complex" 91

Moustakas, Clark 26-28, 35
on loneliness 26, 28

Mozart

Don Giovanni 117

Muhammad, the Prophet 12,
196, 198

"mysterium tremendum" 70

"mystical participation" 47, 50, 55, 61, 118, 124, 194, 252

myth 27, 46, 55, 58, 65, 68-69, 73, 140, 188

mythic imagery 52, 120

mythic rhizome 68-71

N

naked sword 22, 24, 31, 33, 37, 42, 59, 97, 106, 125, 159,

181, 233, 248
 and transformation 106
 narcissistic cocoon 93, 129, 180, 185, 192
 narcissistic personality 67, 93, 172
 “narcissistic wound” 63, 76
 Nasimi (Sufi poet) 8
 Nasr, Seyyed Hossein 81
 Neruda, Pablo 192-193
 “September 8th” 192
 Nicholson 9-10, 81, 83
 Nizami (Persian Poet) 6, 9, 28-
 29, 39, 49, 52-53, 59
The Story of Layla and Majnun
 28
 N/um (!Kung) 49-50

O

O’Flaherty, Wendy Doniger
 139-141, 148, 150-151, 155
 oneness 5, 6, 28, 57-58, 65, 67,
 89, 112, 120, 124, 130,
 135, 137, 146, 148, 155,
 158-159, 168, 170, 177,
 181, 183, 187, 192, 202,
 205, 211, 252
 opposites reconciliation of 162, 207 tension of 222, 237
 “ordinary time” 225-226, 241-
 242, 249
 “original sin” 59
 Otto, Rudolf
The Idea of the Holy 70

P

“paradigm shift” 131 participation mystique 25, 47
 Parvati 140, 151, 153, 155, 157,
 248
Parzival 214
 Paul, St. (the Apostle) 33-34, 233 penitence 165, 187-189, 220
 as “ego-trip” 189
 purpose of 187
 Perceval 209-210, 219, 226, 230
 Persephone 27, 30, 143
 “Persian Quran”
Mathnawi as 141
 Plato 5, 39, 51, 89
Phaedo 39
Symposium 5
 Platonic 97
 poisonous potion 7
 Prose Lancelot
The Quest of the Holy Grail 199
 puppy love 1, 183, 185

Q

Quest of the Holy Grail 199,
 209, 223, 226, 241
 Galahad’s 209
 Gawain’s 215
 Lancelot’s 228
 Quranic Khidr 199

R

- Rabbi Dov Baer 110
 Rabbi Isaac Luria 108
Rati (love-play) 140-146, 148-153, 156, 159
ratiomatra, see rati 140 relationship(s)
 analytical 191
 erotic 151, 159, 172, 174, 225
 renewal of 155, 173, 190, 214
 Remarque, Erich Maria
 Arch of Triumph 60, 67
 romantic love 1, 3-4, 7, 9, 12, 14, 18, 22-23, 25, 27, 32, 34, 36-37, 39, 42, 56, 59, 61, 64, 67-68, 70, 72, 74, 78, 85-86, 90-91, 112-113, 124, 130-131, 136, 139-142, 149, 157, 163, 168, 177, 190, 192, 197, 199, 203, 208, 211, 213, 222, 227-228, 233-234, 242, 248-249 and mysticism 9
 as neurotic 192
 romantic love and human relationship 7
 marriage 37
 the love of God 18, 70
 Romeo and Juliet 9
 Rougemont, Denis de 1-2, 25, 37, 140
 Love in the Western World 1, 25
 Round Table 200-202, 209, 216, 230, 236, 240, 242-243, 246-248

- Rumi, Jelaluddin 4-6, 8, 10, 12-13, 19-20, 35, 115, 136, 141-142, 146, 192, 203-206, 228
 Mathnawi 10, 141, 204
 Quatrain 5, 35, 136
 "We Are Three" 192

S

- Sambhogakaya* ("enjoyment body") 152
 Schimmel, Annemarie 3, 12
 seduction 68, 115-116, 118, 121-123, 127, 129-131, 134-136
 "seeing"
 shamanic activity as 49
 self-hatred 98-99, 231
 Self-level bond 212, 253
 Self-level/Psyche 48-49, 50, 53, 59, 64-65, 68, 112, 179-181, 187, 194-195, 211-212, 214, 232, 251-253
 Self-Self bond 138, 214
 Semele 143
 shamanic activity 49
 healing 48
 shamanism 48, 73, 76
 Shamsuddin of Tabriz 4
 Shaw, George Bernard 85-86, 122-124, 130
 Man and Superman 85, 122
 Shiva 105, 140-142, 144, 148, 150-151, 153, 155, 157, 172, 248

Shostak, Marjorie 48
siddhis 84, 85
 Silesius, Angelus
 Angelus Silesius: The Cherubinic Wanderer 197
 Simon Magus 103-104, 108
 Helena and 103
 Sophia 17-18
 “soul-making” 29, 97, 143
 Spiritual Marriage 134
 Stein, Robert 29, 62-64
 stones falling from heaven 43 stones in pocket 44, 56
 Stutman, Suzanne 166-167, 171
 Sufi 3-4, 6, 8, 10, 12-13, 16-17, 19, 83, 196, 198, 203, 205
 Sufism 3, 9
 sword of separation 24-25, 29-30, 32-36, 52, 136, 172, 181, 188
 “synchronistic” events 38, 42

T

Tanizaki, Junichiro
 Naomi 69
 Tannhaeuser, Heinrich (troubadour) 35-36, 159-166, 173, 184-185, 187-189, 228
 Tannhaeuser, the story of 159
 Tantra 139
 Sahajiya 105, 139
Tapas (“inner heat”) 141-142, 155
 Ten Commandments 202

Teresa of Avila, Saint 15, 112-113, 131, 248
 The Interior Castle 131
 The Story of Abdul 82, 85
 Allerleirauh 119
 Eliduc 23
 Howari 100
 Layla and Majnun 28
 Lohengrin 41
 Tannhaeuser 159
 Yonec 177
 “The Third”, 19-196, 199, 202-205, 207, 213, 215-218, 221, 222-228, 232-238, 240-241, 243, 245-249, 251-252
Tikkun (“wholeness”) 109-110
 Tillich, Paul 90, 93, 112
 Todi, Jacopone da 7, 60
 Tolstoy, Leo 49, 71
 Anna Karenina 49, 71
 transcendent function 26, 207, 221-222, 232, 237, 243 transformation 10, 20, 29, 33, 62, 78, 99, 102, 106, 111, 128-129, 143, 148-149, 153, 179, 181, 211, 218, 220, 222, 234, 247-248, 253
 Tristan 3, 7-9, 22, 25, 38, 47, 60, 62, 72-74, 157, 181, 229 troubadour(s) 1-2, 6, 36, 159, 161, 165
 Trungpa Rinpoche, Chogyam 84
 Turandot legend 39, 52, 56

Twain, Mark

Connecticut Yankee 221

U

Unholy Marriage 95, 102, 105, 108, 112, 114, 129, 191

"Unknown Lady" 2, 10, 13,
122, 232

V

Venusberg ("Mountain of Venus") 160-163, 165-166,
172, 180, 187-188, 213,
243

Verdi, Giuseppe

La Traviata 193

Vergil

The Aeneid 156, 158

Vicomte de Valmont 123

Vishnu (god of illusion) 65-66

von Franz, Marie-Louise 200

The Grail Legend 200

vratyas 105

W

Wagner, Richard 7, 9, 35, 41-44,
52, 56, 159, 161-162, 165,
172, 187, 189, 214

Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg
161

The Story of Tannhaeuser 159

Wharton, Edith

The Age of Innocence 34, 128

Wilde, Oscar 9

Salome 9

William of Poitier and Aquitaine
1, 10, 13, 122, 165

and the "Unknown Lady" 2, 10, 122

"withdrawing the projection"
29

"becoming Layla" 29, 56

Wolfe, Thomas 166, 169-170,
173-176, 191, 213, 220

Look Homeward, Angel 167

The Web and the Rock 166-167

You Can't Go Home Again 167

worthy opponents 177, 189

worthy opposition 175, 177, 180, 186-187, 189, 193,
203-204, 213, 235, 245, 253

woundedness 64-66, 69-70, 72,
74, 76, 79, 93, 121, 156,
176-177, 180, 189, 208,
221, 246, 253

Y

Yonec, the story of 177

Z

Zeus 142-146, 150, 156

and Hera 142

and love-play 142-143

Zimmer, Heinrich 65

Myths and Symbols in Indian Art and Civilization 65

Fisher King Press is pleased to present the following recently published Jungian titles for your consideration:

- Farming Soul* ISBN 978-1-9267150-1-8
Patricia Damery
- The Sister from Below* ISBN 978-0-9810344-2-3
Naomi Ruth Lowinsky
- The Motherline* ISBN 978-0-9810344-6-1
Naomi Ruth Lowinsky
- The Creative Soul* ISBN 978-0-9810344-4-7
Lawrence H. Staples
- Guilt with a Twist* ISBN 978-0-9776076-4-8
Lawrence H. Staples
- Enemy, Cripple, Beggar* ISBN 978-0-9776076-7-9
Erel Shalit
- Re-Imagining Mary* ISBN 978-0-9810344-1-6
Mariann Burke
- Resurrecting the Unicorn* ISBN 978-0-9810344-0-9
Bud Harris
- The Father Quest* ISBN 978-0-9810344-9-2
Bud Harris
- Like Gold Through Fire* ISBN 978-0-9810344-5-4
Massimilla and Bud Harris
- The Art of Love: The Craft of Relationship*
Massimilla and Bud Harris ISBN 978-1-9267150-2-5

Learn more about the many worthy publications available for purchase at www.fisherkingpress.com

In Canada & the U.S. call

1-800-228-9316

International call

+1-831-238-7799

info@fisherkingpress.com

“This is one of the rarest of books—one that really does speak to the heart as well as to the mind.”

“John R. Haule’s wonderful study of Romantic Love... is a first-rate psychological, literary and spiritual study... The author’s passion and courage in delving into his own experience... makes reading it a powerful experience in its own right.... One cannot help seeing oneself reflected in the magic mirror of Haule’s study and deriving light and succor therefrom. This is one of the rarest of books—one that really does speak to the heart as well as to the mind.”

—Timothy O’Neill, Gnosis Magazine

“The author brings us wonderful stories from all over the world that point to the lover’s task: to see through to the soul of the beloved. Even our tangled relationships hide this task in their sufferings. Even the love of God brings us to this work. A moving and helpful book.”

—Ann Belford Ulanov, Christiane Brooks Johnson Professor of Psychiatry and Religion, Union Theological Seminary

“Haule has the clear eye of an analyst, the spirit of a theologian, and the heart of a troubadour. His lyrical prose invites the reader into the depths and breadth of romantic love by exploring its rich and varied imagery in literature and music. ...There are some little surprise jewels tucked in and under the main theme, such as some fresh definitions of classical Jungian concepts.”

—Elizabeth S. Strahan, Past President of the C.G. Jung Institute in Los Angeles

Divine Madness: Archetypes of Romantic Love examines the transforming experience of romantic love in literature, myth, religion, and everyday life. John Ryan Haule holds a doctorate in religious studies from Temple University. He is a Jungian analyst trained in Zurich and is a faculty member of the C.G. Jung Institute-Boston.

ISBN 978-1-926715-04-9

To Order Call 1-800-228-9316
Toll Free in Canada & the US
www.fisherkingpress.com

